Manitoba government seeking guidance on Arts and Culture policy

The Province is asking its citizens to weigh in on the arts and culture sector in Manitoba.

The government wants to get an idea of how it can adapt its culture policies to reflect new technologies and ways of expressing and viewing art.

Minister of sport, culture, and heritage Rochelle Squires says there hasn't been a review on the cultural scene in Manitoba since 1992.

She says Manitoba is a cultural hub and the government wants to preserve and promote that.

"We really have so many cultural assets that we can all be proud of, and as government, we're here to ensure the longevity and the sustainability of our cultural assets for generations to come," says Squires.

A discussion paper has been released to get the ball rolling, and Manitobans can give their opinions until June 30th.

Manitoba Arts Council CEO Akoulina Connell says we need to think about what our value proposition is and ask: how do we position ourselves.

"One of the predominant concerns, even at the national level, is how do we get that Manitoba minnow to swim in that big, digital ocean globally," says Connell.

Connell says the arts council wants to know how Manitoba can have a more collaborative model.

"For Christ's love compels us, because we are convinced that one died for all, and therefore all died. And he died for all, that those who live should no longer live for themselves but for him who died for them and was raised again."
